The Echo of Migration

Unexpected Twists in the Trajectory of European American Assimilation

David Hünlich
Gerda Henkel Visiting Fellow, KU Eichstätt-Ingolstadt / UT Austin

This talk discusses European immigration to the United States and how immigrants and their descendants assimilated into American culture. It offers a study not only of European influences in the United States over a century, but also of the mechanisms through which ethnic origins continue to shape where Americans live, how they work and vote, long after the immigration has passed.
